MICHAEL TERCHA/TRIBUNE

GOOD FIRST DAY

No major problems on debut of massive Red Line renovations

Chicago Tribune

Commuting on the South Side changed fundamentally Monday. Yet at the same time, nothing changed.

CTA Red Line trains were absent from the median of the Dan Ryan Expressway for the first weekday since the south branch opened almost 44 years ago, except for a short disruption during the blizzard of 1979 and a two-day strike later that year, transit officials said.

But as a five-month, $425 million track replacement project began this week on the southern half of the Red Line, making transit connections to get to work or school on time and, above all, staying safe remain constant concerns for riders.

To that end, the number of Chicago police officers and CTA employees wearing orange vests seemed to rival at times the number of commuters boarding and exiting free shuttle buses or waiting on rail platforms.

Still, some riders were stressed out.

For Ed Houston it was about punching in not a minute later than 9 a.m.

"I got a boss, woo, man, he said 'you better be here on time,'" Houston, 48, a painter, said as he transferred from a rerouted Red Line train that he boarded at the Ashland/63rd station to a Green Line train at Garfield. His final destination was Oak Park. "I've been late to work a couple of times because of the CTA," Houston said.

"My boss, he said this [Red Line project] is not an exception. So I got to be there. I need my job."

"But it's good today. Everything is running all right for the first day," added Houston, who said he left home a half-hour earlier than usual, just in case.

The No. 29 State Street bus experienced higher-than-expected ridership Monday morning, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said.

"We have added additional buses for tonight's rush and will have additional bus trips for morning and evening rush periods going forward," Chase said, adding that overall, the first day went well, marked by no major problems with bus or train service.

CTA reports uptick in crimes this month

Attention, customers: There has been an uptick in theft on CTA trains in the Loop this month.

The rash of robberies was the subject of a community alert issued by police officials Monday afternoon.

The alert said that in each incident a male offender about 18-29 years old stole iPhones and purses from people riding the trains or waiting for them.

The first incident was reported in the 200 block of South State Street about 5:30 p.m. Friday. The second took place three hours later in the 100 block of North Wabash Avenue. A third theft was reported in the 100 block of South Dearborn Street at 11:54 a.m. Sunday.

Police officials recommend that people remain calm if confronted by an assailant, and try to remember any unique physical characteristics the assailant has. They also suggest getting contact information from witnesses and reporting the crime immediately, but they say not to pursue the thief. TRIBUNE

Red Line project shows good signs

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

 » tswartz@tribune.com
 » @tracyswartz

A good sign: The CTA learned its lesson from past projects and updated much of the signage for the southern Red Line reconstruction project, making it easier for riders to commute Monday, the first weekday of the five-month initiative.

The CTA replaced maps in its train cars to reflect the nine South Side stations not in service during the track overhaul project, which formally launched Sunday, and the corresponding shuttle bus pickups. Train tracker and trains themselves were properly labeled with their destinations.

Signs at Green Line stations also now reflect that they temporarily are Red Line stations.

In addition to the extra visuals, some train operators used their speakers to announce the project while other announcements were made at the stations.

There were some conflicting signs, though. The CTA didn't update the digital maps on the new rail cars with the aisle-facing seats (too expensive) that run on the Green and Red lines. Going Public noticed some bus shelters and stations with old maps.

GP also didn't see mention of the project on the electronic displays on the Belmont Red Line station platform or on the electronic signs on the inside of the new rail cars.

CTA spokesman Brian Steele said the agency will make some tweaks to signs, including adding one to the shuttle bus hub at the Garfield Green Line station to tell riders the locations of the escalator and elevator. He said the agency is calculating how much it spends on signage.

The CTA learned its lessons after some sign failures from this May's Wells Street Bridge project and last year's decrowding initiative.

Some trains weren't properly labeled with their destinations on the first day of the Wells Street Bridge project, which caused Brown Line reroutes for two weeks.

Last winter, it took weeks for the signs at some bus shelters to see updates after the December decrowding initiative, which changed the hours and/or routes of more than a dozen bus lines.

Riders who don't use the Green Line or the South Side Red Line also may have seen some modifications to their commute Monday. The CTA updated timetables of at least a dozen bus routes and every train line except for the Yellow Line.

Riders also should watch for congestion in the Red Line subway from the extra Green Line traffic. The CTA didn't report any overcrowding during the Monday morning rush hour, as it did for a few days during the Wells Street Bridge project, but it was only Day 2 of reconstruction.

Just 152 more days to go.

Life according to BRT

On May 29, Going Public will host a panel of Chicago transit experts discussing bus rapid transit, express bus service coming to Ashland Avenue. The event will be 5:30-8 p.m. at the Chicago Cultural Center, 78 E. Washington St. Go to goodchicagobrt.eventbrite.com for more information.

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note

This week: Austin Green Line

For those keeping track at this station on the line between Austin and Oak Park, Green Line trains were running on a single track between the Austin and Cicero stops for part of last week. The CTA said it was performing routine maintenance work to realign the horizontal and vertical positions of track. "With the heavy use, things shift over time," CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said. "We use a tamper machine (track maintenance machine) to straighten everything out to keep the track in good working order."

SUMMER CHALLENGE!

#REDEYECHECKLIST

Looking for something to do this summer in Chicago? How about 25 somethings?

The sunshine season is fleeting around here, so we want to help you make the best of it. Take part in our 2013 RedEye Summer Checklist challenge! Here's how it works.

1. Meet a challenge on our checklist.

2. Prove it: Take a photo. Tag us in it on Instagram or Twitter, use hashtag: #redeyechallenge; tag "RedEye" in your Facebook photo. (Be sure to tell us which challenge you've completed!)

3. We'll pick a few challengers every month to win canvas prints of their photos.

4. We'll share some of our favorite submissions on Facebook, Instagram and Twitter.

Here's a sampling of the checklist:

- » Ride the Water Taxi to Chinatown ... it's only $6 from downtown!
- » Guzzle beers at Gene's Sausage Shop's rooftop garden ... best views from Lincoln Square.
- » Grill on the beach ... you can do it at Montrose.
- » Catch the fireworks at Navy Pier ... and then never go back.

Full checklist, rules and tips at redeyechicago.com/checklist

They may not be the most difficult challenges, but they'll definitely be a lot of fun. Our staff also will be playing along, so look out for the RedEye challengers to keep your own progress in check.

Starts NOW, ends in September. Recruit your friends, and get to summering!

SEARCH AND RESCUE

OFFICIALS RUSH TO FIND SURVIVORS
AFTER TORNADO SMASHES OKLAHOMA

Reuters

MOORE, Okla. A massive tornado tore through the Oklahoma City suburb of Moore on Monday, killing at least 51 people with winds of up to 200 mph that flattened entire tracts of homes, two schools and a hospital, leaving a wake of tangled wreckage.

Rescue workers raced against the setting sun to find survivors as the dangerous storm system threatened as many as 10 states with more twisters.

The Oklahoma medical examiner confirmed 51 deaths, including 20 children, making it the deadliest U.S. tornado since one killed 161 people in Joplin, Mo., two years ago, according to the National Weather Service. There were 70 reported tornado-related deaths in all of 2012.

Some 20 to 30 schoolchildren were missing and feared dead beneath the rubble, KFOR-TV reported, citing unnamed officials from the scene.

Police and fire crews pulled third-graders from the devastated Plaza Towers Elementary school in Moore, a KFOR reporter said from the scene, and aerial video showed teams sifting through the rubble left behind.

"I have never seen anything like this in my 18 years covering tornadoes here in Oklahoma City. This is without question the most horrific," said Lance West, a reporter for KFOR.

The National Weather Service Storm Prediction Center provided the town with a warning 16 minutes before the tornado touched down at 3:01 p.m. local time, which is more than the average eight to 10 minutes of warning, said Keli Pirtle, a spokeswoman for the center in Norman, Okla.

The notice was upgraded to emergency warning with "heightened language" at 2:56 p.m., or five minutes before the tornado touched down, Pirtle said.

TV images showed blocks of homes leveled by the powerful tornado, cars piled atop one another and buildings on fire.

The National Weather Service assigned the twister a preliminary ranking of EF4 on the Enhanced Fujita Scale, meaning the second-most powerful category of tornado with winds up to 200 mph.

Briarwood Elementary School, which also stood in the storm's path, was all but destroyed. On the first floor, sections of walls had been peeled away, affording clear views into the building, while in other areas, cars hurled by the storm winds were lodged in the walls.

While the school was a wreck, nearby playground equipment stood undamaged, though littered with rubble.

Across the street, people picked through the remains of their homes, looking for any possessions they might salvage.

At least 45 people were injured, according to officials of four hospitals.

"[The injured] are coming in minute by minute," Integris Southwest Medical Center spokeswoman Brooke Cayot said. Of the 19 injured there, seven were in critical condition, seven serious and five listed as fair or good, Cayot said.

The University of Oklahoma Medical Center had received at least 20 injured. St. Anthony Healthplex South in Oklahoma City said it received four patients and Midwest Regional received four.

Moore Medical Center sustained significant damage.

"The whole city looks like a debris field," Glenn Lewis, the mayor of Moore, told NBC.

"It looks like we have lost our hospital," he said. "I drove by there a while ago and it's pretty much destroyed."

WHITE HOUSE RESPONSE

President Obama told Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin the federal government "stands ready to provide all available assistance." A White House statement said the Federal Emergency Management Agency has deployed a team to assist state operations, and additional personnel are ready to be dispatched as necessary. Obama told Fallin that "the people of Oklahoma" are in the first family's "thoughts and prayers," the statement said.

and members of the National Guard, activated by Gov. Mary Fallin, were on the scene, said Terri Watkins, a spokeswoman for the Oklahoma Department of Emergency Management.

"They are going to go house to house, building to building to determine whether anyone is trapped," Watkins said. "If anyone is trapped, we want to begin pulling them out as quickly as possible."

The massive twister struck at the height of tornado season, and more have been forecast. On Sunday, tornadoes killed two people and injured 39 in Oklahoma.

Witnesses said Monday's tornado appeared more fierce than the giant twister that was among the dozens that tore up the region on May 3, 1999, killing more than 40 people and destroying thousands of homes. That tornado ranked as an EF5, meaning it had winds of more than 200 mph.

The 1999 event ranks as the third-costliest tornado in U.S. history, having caused more than $1 billion in damage at the time, or more than $1.3 billion in today's dollars. Only the devastating Joplin and Tuscaloosa tornadoes in 2011 were more costly.

The National Weather Service predicted a 10 percent chance of tornadoes in parts of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri and Illinois. It said parts of four other states—Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan and Iowa—have a 5 percent risk of tornadoes.

The area at greatest risk includes Joplin, which on Wednesday will mark two years since the tornado that killed 161 people.

It's time to round up the coyote puppies!

Chicago Tribune

"Pups!"

Mike Neri's voice echoed through a suburban forest preserve, announcing his find. He was quickly joined by fellow wildlife biologists who had been combing the underbrush looking for a coyote den. They found Neri scrambling through an ancient junk pile, plucking puppies from rusting car remains.

On that recent moist spring day, the researchers rounded up eight coyote pups, surprisingly docile and predictably adorable.

Under the white noise of the nearby Jane Addams Memorial Tollway (Interstate 90), the scientists began collecting data on the animals as part of the Cook County Coyote Project, a study of coyotes in the Chicago area run since 2000 by the Max McGraw Wildlife Foundation, the Forest Preserve District of Cook County and Cook County Animal and Rabies Control.

The findings could show that coyote numbers have nearly reached their limit in the six-county study area.

Four coyote puppies, 1-2 weeks old, are held Friday by a carnivore technician from the Max McGraw Wildlife Foundation. CHRIS WALKER/TRIBUNE FILE

"We're not done yet, but the indications are the litter sizes are not as large as they were in the past," said Stanley Gehrt, the Ohio State University wildlife biologist who leads the study. "This will probably be the lowest average litter size we've had since the study began. It should indicate that the coyote population is hitting a plateau."

Ideally, researchers want to get to the pups before they can return to the den or scatter too far.

"They're a lot easier to catch now than in a couple of weeks when they get their legs under them," Neri said. "Then it really gets crazy, running through the brush and trying not to fall while you're trying to net a pup."

When a den is found, researchers put their ears to the opening and listen. The mother may still be close, so sometimes they can hear her barking—either to warn the pups or draw away the intruders.

"We pull the young ones out, and we'll process them, take hair samples or blood. We'll put a PIT [passive integrated transponder] tag in them in case we encounter them again," said Chris Anchor, who leads a team of fellow wildlife biologists for the forest preserve.

To anyone worried about a coyote invasion, Anchor is reassuring. "The great thing about coyotes is that they're self-limiting. They're very territorial. They don't allow interlopers."

White House officials knew of IRS findings

WASHINGTON Top officials in the White House learned in April that an investigation of the IRS probably would end up showing that the agency targeted conservative groups for special scrutiny, a White House spokesman conceded Monday, contrary to earlier Obama administration statements.

But White House Press Secretary Jay Carney said staffers didn't tell President Obama the bombshell was coming and that the West Wing did nothing to interfere with the audit or the report before its release.

"The cardinal rule," Carney said, "is that you do not intervene in an independent investigation, and you do not do anything that would give such an appearance. ... And that's the doctrine we followed."

Since an Inspector General's report on the matter was released last week, Republicans have been trying to figure out how long the Obama administration has known about the allegations—and, in particular, whether the president was aware of the irregularities while running for re-election in 2012.

The leaders of the Senate Finance Committee sent a bipartisan letter to the IRS on Monday calling on the acting commissioner to disclose a raft of information on the matter, including any signs of communications between the IRS and the White House.

"Targeting applicants for tax-exempt status using political labels threatens to undermine the public's trust in the IRS," Sen. Max Baucus (D-Mont.) wrote in a letter co-signed by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the committee's ranking Republican. "Lack of candor in advising the Senate of this practice is equally troubling."

WESTERN CONFERENCE SEMIFINALS • GAME 3

THE HAT TRICK

WHAT'S BUZZIN' IN THE BLACKHAWKS' WORLD

Seriously, a great leader

Postseason recognition continues to come Jonathan Toews' way. The Blackhawks center, nicknamed "Captain Serious," was named Monday as one of three finalists for the 2012-13 Mark Messier NHL Leadership Award. Ottawa's Daniel Alfredsson and L.A.'s Dustin Brown are the other finalists.

Out of the doghouse

After sitting out the first two games of the series for reasons that have been kept under wraps, forward Viktor Stalberg was back on the ice Monday. "I'll just keep it simple, play hard and use my assets to my advantage," he said before Game 3.

THE MOUTHWATCH

"You have to save it for another time, or deal with it after the season is over. But sitting Stalberg was a big mistake and hurt the team in Game 2."

—Former Blackhawks star Jeremy Roenick, on Joel Quenneville benching Viktor Stalberg for Game 2. Roenick spoke on ESPN Radio's "Carmen and Jurko" show Monday.

BLACKHAWKS VS. DETROIT

(Red Wings lead series 2-1)

Game 1: Blackhawks 4, Red Wings 1

Game 2: Red Wings 4, Blackhawks 1

Game 3: Red Wings 3, Blackhawks 1

Game 4: at Red Wings, 7 p.m. Thursday, NBC Sports

Game 5: at Blackhawks, 7 p.m. Saturday, NBC

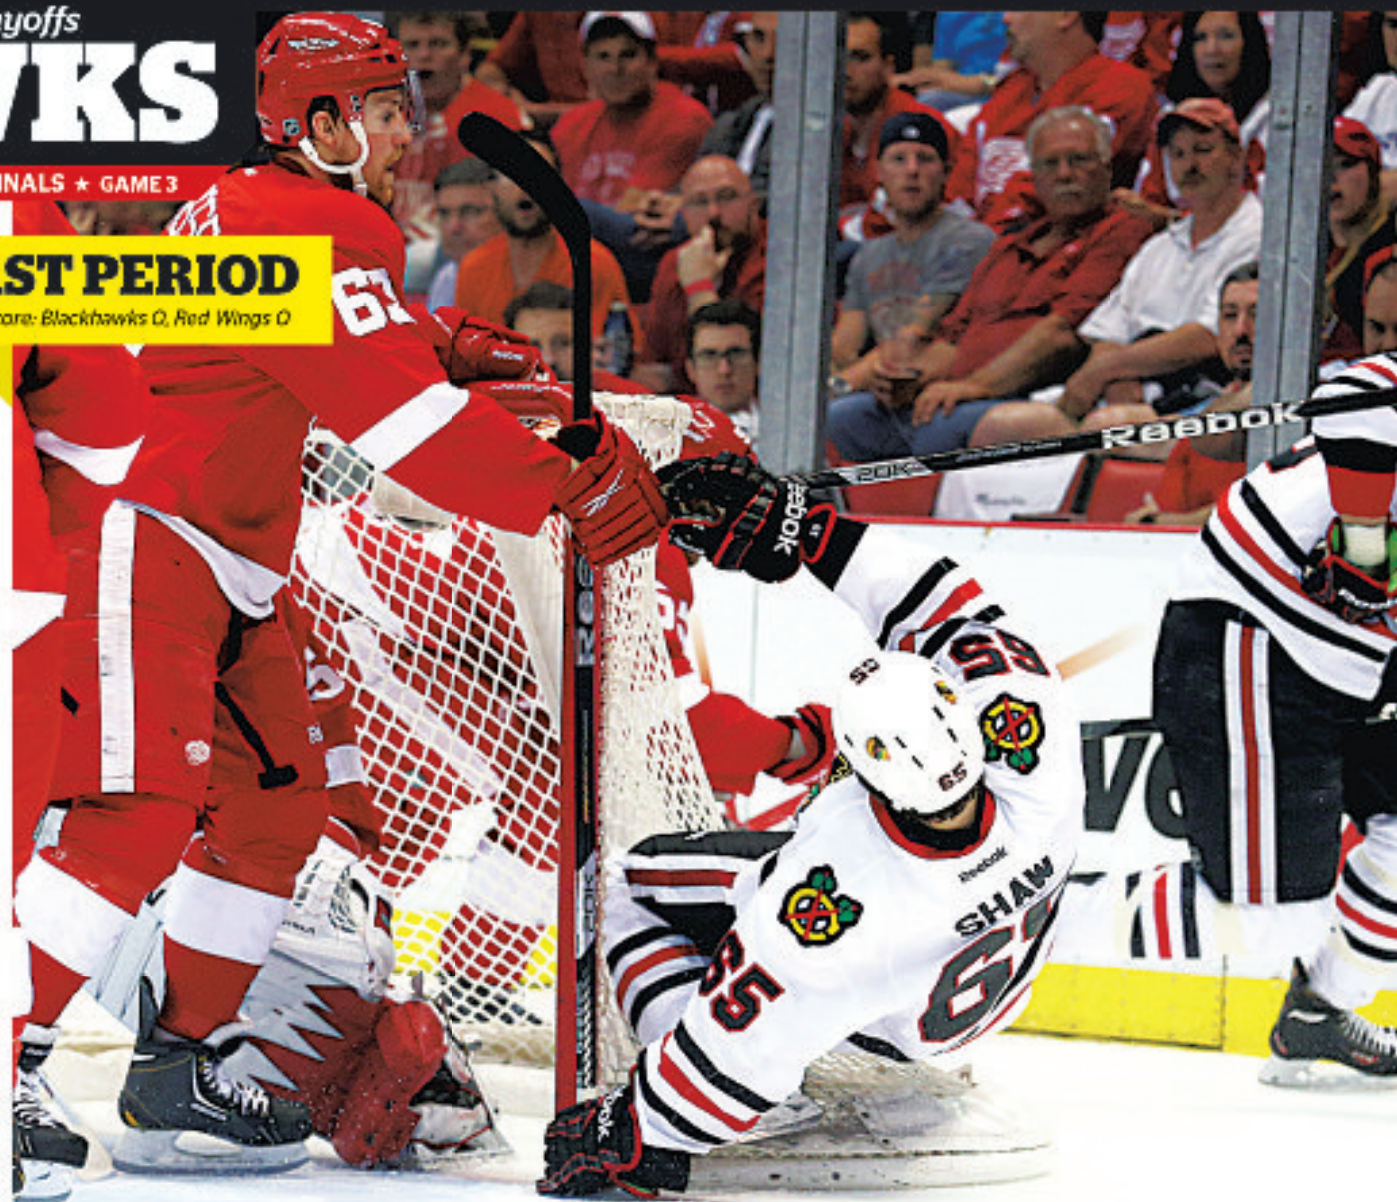

Game 6*: at Red Wings, Monday (time/channel TBD)

Game 7*: at Blackhawks, May 29 (time/channel TBD)

*If necessary

1ST PERIOD

Score: Blackhawks 0, Red Wings 0

Tillimmmmbbbeeerrrr! Blackhawks center Andrew Shaw isn't the biggest guy in the Hawks-Wings series, but he might be one of the toughest. He'll have to be, if he keeps taking shots like this one. MUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

How'd he do that? Detroit goaltender Jimmy Howard made 15 saves in the first period, stalling a frenzied Blackhawks attack. The goal post made another stop, on a Jonathan Toews scoring chance. So. Frustrating. REUTERS

Nice try, Joakim Hawks goalie Corey Crawford stopped eight shots early on, including this one on Joakim Andersson. Chicago fans don't like THAT Joakim. US PRESSWIRE

THE STARTING LINE

• Cubs at Pittsburgh, 6:05 p.m. CSN • White Sox vs. Boston, 7:10 p.m. WCIU • Alabama's broken 2011 BC5 title trophy sells for $105,000

FREEZE FRAMES

Uh oh—Hawks stopped in their tracks for the second straight game

Lose your focus for a fraction of a second in an NHL regular-season game, and you could give up a goal or get flattened by a check. That goes double for the playoffs. And triple when it's Blackhawks-Red Wings.

We'll let the photos from Monday's Game 3 tell the story. REDEYE

2ND PERIOD

Score: Red Wings 2, Blackhawks 0

The first laugh Despite the Blackhawks dominating early, Detroit's Gustav Nyquist drew first blood Monday. That's gonna be trouble. MC

Bummer, man Um, yeah. Giving up two goals in 30 seconds will make you feel just like this.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

Wing zinged

Drew Miller (No. 20) beat the Hawks defense to a rebound and deflated the Windy City with his goal.

REUTERS

You gotta be kidding

If only the Hawks' luck had been a tiny bit better, they wouldn't have hit the post so many times. Right, Viktor Stalberg? REUTERS

False hope

For a split second, it looked like the Hawks would be able to unravel the Wings. Alas, Patrick Kane's goal was the only highlight.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

3RD PERIOD

Final score: Red Wings 3, Blackhawks 1

Turning point? Detroit has plenty to celebrate, with a 2-1 series lead—not to mention momentum on their side. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

1	How can you tell the Red Sox are in town?	People are trying to park the car in the Union Stockyards.	Big Papi is holding up the line at Portillo's!	Some guy named "Sully" wearing a BoSox jersey is threatening to fight me.	I keep hearing "Pahk the cah in Hahwahd Yahd."	Because this Yankees fan suddenly becomes the White Sox's biggest cheerleader.
2	How can you tell the Cubs are out of town?	No one is willingly drinking Old Style.	White Sox fans have nothing to talk about?	Wrigley smells less like urine and peanuts and more like urine without peanuts.	People can actually park their cars in Wrigleyville.	There are at least three available parking spots in Wrigleyville AS WE SPEAK.
3	Who you got in the NBA finals?	In a surprise move, Derrick Rose.	David Stern! He just emailed me the champion and it was a picture of himself.	ESPN and LeBron.	Well, Miami is the best vacation city left, so I'm going with the Heat.	All I have in the NBA finals is a bag of Doritos Locos Tacos chips and a sense of apathy.
4	What's a Hawk to do with free time in Detroit?	They should eat at the restaurant.	Protect your neck! I heard Miguel was doing a concert up there.	Isn't there an Insane Clown Posse Hall of Fame there? One would hope.	STAY IN THE HOTEL. Do NOT go outside!	Call up Eminem and take a joyride in his Chrysler.
5	How is that playoff mullet working out for Patrick Kane?	Better than my playoff Afro.	The same way pregnancy is working for Kim Kardashian's feet. #looksuncomfortable	Aerodynamically hindering. One goal in seven games. C'mon, mullet! Wake up!	Another 4-1 loss and I'm cutting it myself!	It has passed Captain Planet level and is approaching Chuck Norris status.

Ellen Shockley throwing a beer on her husband at Wrigley Field on Sunday WGN TV IMAGE

Cubs fans can drink to forgiveness

Chicago Tribune

Ellen Shockley, the beer-tossing wife from the left field bleachers of Wrigley Field, wanted Chicago Cubs fans to know one thing about her.

She is not a serial beer-tosser.

"If it was not my husband, I would not have done it," Shockley said Monday after the video of the incident went viral.

Ellen and her husband, Tim, who met in the bleachers and have been married since 1992, were at Sunday's Cubs-Mets game when Tim tried to reach over his head for Travis Wood's two-run homer. While doing so, he accidentally spilled a little of his beer onto Ellen. The WGN-TV cameras then caught Ellen tossing her beer over Tim's head. The scene was replayed a few times, including in slow motion.

“If it was not my husband, I would not have done it.”

—Ellen Shockley on throwing a beer at her husband

The Shockleys were laughing at the video and enjoying their 15 minutes of fame Monday after hearing it was on "SportsCenter," "Good Morning America" "WGN Morning News" and other news and sports shows.

But by midday Monday, Tim began reading negative comments about Ellen's act of retaliation on some blogs and Internet reports, which he felt crossed the line.

"They were saying things like she needed anger management, or that she was probably a Sox fan," Tim said.

"I think they were too hard on her. I thought it was funny," he said. "It's not like she shot me. Not that I want to give her any ideas or anything."

Ellen said she decided to drench her husband in retaliation for him spilling on her, but didn't realize it was going to be on YouTube 20 minutes later.

"My first reaction was 'You [expletive], I'm soaking wet, so now you are going to be soaking wet, too,'" she said. "But really, I would not have done that to a stranger if that happened. I might have jumped on him."

The two have a partial season ticket plan in the bleachers, and said they stand in the same spot near the back row whenever they're together at a game.

ATHLETES AND ACTORS HEAT UP CHICAGO'S SPRING SOCIAL SCENE

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

• lgomez@tribune.com
• @aboutluisgomez

Chicago socialites had a difficult decision to make Saturday, with three celebrity-hosted galas taking place at the same time. But for the see-and-be-seen crowd, this likely was a good problem.

Those who attended the 26th annual Make-A-Wish Illinois Wish Ball at the UIC Forum saw Martin Short perform.

The $500-per-ticket event featured a video message from Steve Carell and one from Mayor Emanuel.

The guests at the 18th annual Bears Care Gala at the United Club at Soldier Field were able to meet Bears players, including Jay Cutler and Brandon Marshall, and new head coach Marc Trestman. Cutler and fiancée Kristin Cavallari attended the $400-per-ticket fundraiser following their dinner at Chicago Cut Steakhouse. According to Bears Care director Marge Hamm, the gala raised more than $500,000 for Bears Care and breast and ovarian cancer research and treatment programs in the Chicago area.

Meanwhile, partygoers at the sold-out, 27th annual Starlight Children's Foundation Midwest Gala at the Standard Club were able to party with model-turned-actress Beverly Johnson. The $350-per-ticket event raised nearly $400,000 for the organization.

If you're disappointed you missed these celebrity-hosted fundraisers, there are plenty of good ones taking place this summer. Here are a handful to watch for:

- The Gene Siskel Film Center of the School of the Art Institute of Chicago will honor Gwyneth Paltrow during its annual gala June 15 at the Ritz-Carlton Chicago hotel.
- Cutler and Cavallari are hosting the Jay Cutler Foundation '80s Dance Party for Diabetes on July 18 at Joe's Bar. "Caribbean Queen" singer Billy Ocean is booked to perform.
- Bill and Giuliana Rancie and Bill Murray are scheduled to attend Woody's Wiffle Ball Classic, which will be hosted by retired Cub Kerry Wood and will benefit the Wood Family Foundation, on Aug. 10 at Wrigley Field.

red hotJune 3*HOT DATEThat's when Miley Cyrus' new single, "We Can't Stop," will drop, she confirmed Sunday to billboard.com.CRASH LANDING

No, Miguel didn't plan the stage jump that resulted in a kick to fans' heads Sunday at the Billboard Music Awards in Las Vegas. "The crazy thing is, when you're performing and you're just kind of into it, you never know where it's gonna go and where you're gonna go with it, and how that might turn out," he told billboard.com. "So this is one of the less favorable moments." The good news: Nobody was seriously hurt.

"Traumatized critics exhale: I'm unable to do the Oscars again."

—Seth MacFarlane in a tweet Monday. The "Family Guy" creator cited a scheduling conflict and then gave his suggestion for host: Joaquin Phoenix.

Khloe to the rescue

Lay off Kim, you guys! So says Khloe Kardashian, who defended her older sister from the ignorant people who have criticized her weight since she announced her pregnancy. "I find it disturbing that society loves to critique a woman's shape," Khloe wrote in a blog post Sunday. Wait, there's a downside to being a professional sex symbol?

More 'Wars'

What happens between Episodes III and IV of the "Star Wars" movie franchise? Disney is going to answer that, Reuters reports. The studio announced Monday that it will produce "Star Wars Rebels," an animated series to air on the Disney Channel and Disney XD in fall 2014, filling time before the next live-action film hits theaters in 2015.

When Avril met Chad

How did Avril Lavigne end up with Nickelback frontman Chad Kroeger? Easy. "He came down to write a song with me for the record and then he didn't leave," Lavigne joked to mtv.com. "Then we just ended up becoming really good friends, and setting up more writing sessions and now we're engaged." See? Easy.
